The present study investigated a possible correlation between the expression of interleukin-2 (IL-2) receptor and macrophage migration inhibitory factor (MIF) in bovine trabecular meshwork. For that purpose, 90, 180, and 270-nm thick sections of deeply embedded tissue were immunostained for IL-2 receptor and for MIF as detected with peroxidase anti-peroxidase complex and immunogold methods. Both antibodies were distributed in the granules of the lamellar bodies, but only MIF was present in the cytoplasm of the cells. This finding suggests the presence of MIF in the conjunctival drainage facility, suggesting that this may be of importance when studying the immunological role of the inflammatory response of the trabecular meshwork.Tendon
