(2004). and, in this case, we are dealing with corporate funds, the legal insulation of corporations from personal liability may cause an officer or director to hesitate in deciding whether to lend a corporate fund to the corporation for a legitimate and lawful purpose. If, as here, he approves a loan, he may, in the eyes of a prudent creditor, believe that the transaction is a wise investment and that he can recover from the corporation from any loans made in the future. In a year of rising interest rates, the secured creditor will not be in the mood to give additional loans to the corporation, and the officer who made the loans for the corporation will believe that, even with a superior charge, his loan would not be made in the future. This is an instance in which a prudent creditor would be satisfied with the ordinary return of the bonds. This court does not think that the title to the bonds secured by the collateral notes is inferior to the title of the trustee, since the whole transaction, in our opinion, was at arm's length. This view is supported by the provisions of the Uniform Commercial Code. Article 9, section 9.102, reads as follows: "The term (security interest) includes any interest of a mortgagee, pledgee, purchaser, or other lienor in possession of collateral. A security interest is not enforceable against the debtor or third parties with respect to the collateral and does not attach unless (a) the collateral is in the possession of the secured party pursuant to agreement, or the debtor has signed a security agreement containing a description of the collateral, (b) value has been given, and (c) the debtor has rights in the collateral. This subsection does not affect title as between the debtor and the secured party." Section 9.402, above, makes it clear that the possession by the secured party constitutes its ownership for the purpose of such section. Sections 9.301, and 9.102 and the comments thereunder make it clear that title to the collateral remains in the debtor until the secured party exercises the right of disposition

I am developing an application which use images and effects with it. I need to know whether an image is captured by default or by some kind of camera? Thanks in advance A: You need to check the cameraType property in UIImagePickerController. It is something like this:

UIImagePickerController *imagePicker = [[UIImagePickerController alloc] init]; if ([UIImagePickerController isSourceTypeAvailable:UIImagePickerControllerSourceTypeCamera]) { //
    check the property cameraType and instantiate a picker imagePicker.cameraType = UIImagePickerControllerSourceTypeCamera; imagePicker.showsCameraControls = NO; } else { // camera is unavailable so show the settings picker imagePicker.cameraType = UIImagePickerControllerSourceTypePhotoLibrary; } UIImagePickerControllerSourceTypeCamera is also a valid value of the cameraType property for a UIImagePickerController. d0c515b9f4
