Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method for detecting a short circuited state of circuits in a circuit system, and more particularly, to a short circuit test method for testing a short circuit of resistors, capacitors and diode circuits used in a circuit system, and a method for detecting the short circuit of the circuit system. 2. Description of the Related Art A conventional short circuit test method is roughly classified into two methods. The two methods include (1) a method in which a negative voltage is applied through a resistor to be tested when a positive voltage is applied to a power supply terminal of a circuit system and a short circuit state of the resistor is detected by measuring the time taken for the voltages to reach a predetermined value, and (2) a method in which a predetermined voltage is applied to the resistor and a short circuit state of the resistor is detected by measuring the current flowing through the resistor. According to the conventional short circuit test methods described above, the voltage applied to the resistor must be changed and the time taken for the voltage to reach a predetermined value must be measured, so that these operations are time consuming. 3. Technical Field The present invention relates in general to the field of computers, and in particular to method and apparatus for synchronizing time in a computer system. 4. Description of Related Art Many computers and computer systems, within other computing devices execute operating systems in which the time from the time of system booting is set to a fixed value, such as the day the computer or computer system is turned on, with no provisions for adjusting this fixed time based on the environment or system conditions. The operating system calculates the time by using the time of the computer system's local time. However, the computer system's environment or system conditions may be such
